Old Harry Rocks, Dorset and Lion's Mane Jellyfish

Old Harry Rocks were once part of a long stretch of chalk cliffs, eroded by the sea. The chalk sea stacks form the tip of Ballard Down, the headland sheltering beautiful Studland Bay, with stunning views along the Jurassic Coast. The lion's mane jellyfish is found in cold waters around the UK, including the English Channel, and is one of the largest species of jellyfish.

Loughrigg Fell, Cumbria and Peregrine Falcon

Loughrigg Fell sits in a prominent, isolated position at the junction of five major valley systems, with panoramic views of the Central Fells and the Langdale Pikes. Loughrigg Tarn, below, is a beautiful, secluded tarn. Seen on mountainous terrain, moorland and cliffs, the peregrine falcon is a stunning bird in flight.

Sunlight illuminates a field of scarlet poppies, which thrive in uncultivated fields, producing a vibrant carpet of colour. Situated near Hadrian's Wall, Corbridge was once the most northerly town in the Roman Empire, known as Coria. The weasel is the UK's smallest carnivore, making its habitat in lowland pasture, woodland, marshland and moors.

Formby nature reserve encompasses a diverse landscape, from pine woodland to a stunning beach, one of the largest dune systems in Europe, covered by marram grass, and with amazing coastal vistas. The rare natterjack toad breeds in warm, shallow pools on dunes and sandy heaths in just a few UK locations and is smaller than the common toad.

Beech forest in Westbury, Wiltshire and Badger

Many of the clumps of beech on the Wiltshire downs were established in the 19th century, often planted for shelter next to old trackways. The market town of Westbury is overlooked by the Westbury White Horse chalk hill figure. Badgers are territorial, keeping to the same woodland tracks. Living in a sett, a system of underground tunnels.

Somerset is characterised by a diversity of landscapes, ranging from the high open remote downland, ancient forests and woodland, and dramatic steep escarpment slopes, to more secluded chalk river valleys. The pheasant is common here. It rises rapidly in the air almost vertically if disturbed from its nest in the undergrowth, with wings whirring and a loud crowing.
